To whom it may concern

I am an internist, MSc in Pharmacology and PhD in Nutrition and I am the chief of the Hellenic Parliament' health services unit. Moreover, I am a medical doctor with additional qualification in Homeopathy, so, in my private practice, I practice integrative Medicine and Homeopathy for more than 20 years, and I teach Homeopathy too. I am a full member of the Hellenic Homeopathic Medical Society, of the Hellenic Association of Homeopathic Medical Cooperation, and of the European Committee for Homeopathy (ECH) too and its vice-president for the last 4 years. The following view expressed in this text is strictly my own and does not represent my associations or my employers.

I met Dr Frederik Schroyens as a teacher in Alonissos (Greece) many years ago. Later, I had the opportunity to meet him again during various congresses and during the ECH meeting, where I admired his innovative thinking and synthetic approach on finding the most suitable homeopathy remedy. His strategy was really helpful to my daily homeopathy practice, so I respect him as a colleague, teacher, and mentor. Frederik had completed invaluable work with RadarOpus, and especially with Synthesis; this work had -and still has- a huge impact on the whole Homeopathy community of medical doctors and practitioners. I could only imagine the time and effort needed to create such a demanding work like Synthesis in those times when data were not available on the internet!

In my mind -and obviously that of many other colleagues- his name is directly linked with RadarOpus and Synthesis.
